TAP CANCER OUT

Alex's Lemonade Stand Foundation's (ALSF) Travel For Care program offers assistance to eligible families who must travel in order for their child to receive potentially lifesaving treatment. By supplying flights, gas cards and hotel stays, ALSF is supporting childhood cancer families nationwide.

Meet ALSF's Travel For Care Program Heroes:

Aine

For 13-year-old Aine, childhood cancer hasn't just meant extra trips to the doctor. It's meant sacrificing cheerleading, time with friends and more, all due to her fight with Ewing sarcoma. With no local hospital offering the treatment she needed, she had to travel 4.5 hours to Cincinnati every other week. Her mom, Kelly, wasn't able to work, which left their family reliant on one income. That's why financial assistance from ALSF's Travel For Care program meant so much to them. It gave them peace of mind to focus on what mattered most, Aine's health.

Elijah

Elijah was underweight at 13 years old, and his mother Jennifer knew something wasn't right. Soon afterwards, doctors diagnosed him with CNS germinoma, a brain tumor. After a difficult treatment, Elijah entered remission, back on the path towards his lifelong goal of traveling the Appalachian Trail. Then, he relapsed 15 months later. While undergoing treatment at a distant hospital, the Travel For Care program helped his family cover gas costs to ensure he has the best chance to beat his disease.

Thomas

Shortly before Thomas turned 6, he began to have persistent headaches. When a neurologist ordered an MRI to find the cause, it revealed a huge tumor in his brain. After surgery, he was diagnosed with a rare, aggressive sarcoma. He needed intense treatment only available in Philadelphia, nearly 2.5 hours away from home. His mom, Amber, scrambled to find lodging in the city, but the Travel For Care program helped them find a room when there was nowhere else available. Thomas is now 8 and has lingering complications from treatment, but continues to fight his disease.

Alex's Lemonade Stand Foundation (ALSF) emerged from the front yard lemonade stand of 4-year-old Alexandra "Alex" Scott, who was fighting cancer and wanted to raise money to find cures for all children with cancer. Since then, the Foundation bearing her name has evolved into a national fundraising movement.
